In 2019, a group of young Australians set out on an epic adventure to circumnavigate the country by motorbike. They called themselves the "Girt by Dirt" crew, and their journey would take them through some of the most remote and challenging terrain in the world.

The crew consisted of four riders: Chris, James, Matt, and Sarah. They were all experienced riders, but they knew that this journey would be a test of their limits. They packed their bikes with supplies and set off from Perth, Western Australia, in September 2019.

The crew rode through the vast deserts of the outback, the lush rainforests of the tropics, and the rugged mountains of the interior. They encountered extreme heat, rain, and wind, but they never gave up. They also met some amazing people along the way, who helped them with food, shelter, and advice.

After six months and over 15,000 kilometers, the crew finally completed their journey in Melbourne, Victoria. They had ridden through every state and territory in Australia, and they had experienced the country in a way that few people ever do.

Their journey was an inspiration to others, and it showed that anything is possible with a little determination and a lot of dirt.

The Book

The crew's journey has been chronicled in a book called Girt By Dirt: An Australian Adventure. The book is a beautifully written and photographed account of their travels. It is a must-read for anyone who loves adventure, travel, or Australia.
